SELECTED TECHNICAL RULES

Article 31: Format – final competition

The final competition shall be played in a group stage, followed by three knockout stages, the play-off for third place and the final.

Articles 33–36: Knock-out stages

In the knockout stages, if, after 90 minutes, the match ends in a draw, extra time of two periods of 15 minutes each will be played. If the score is level after extra time, penalty kicks will be taken to determine the winner in accordance with the procedure described in the Laws of the Game.

Article 32 Group stage

The ranking of each team in each group shall be determined as follows:

- greatest number of points obtained in all group matches;
- goal difference in all group matches;
- greatest number of goals scored in all group matches.

If two or more teams are equal on the basis of the above three criteria, their rankings shall be determined as follows:

- greatest number of points obtained in the group matches between the teams concerned;
- goal difference resulting from the group matches between the teams;
- greater number of goals scored in all group matches between the teams;
- greater number of points obtained in fair play conduct of the teams;
- drawing of lots by FIFA.

FIFA WORLD CUP HISTORY

The world's first international football match was played in Glasgow in 1872 between Scotland and England. The first international tournament, the British Home Championship, took place in 1884.

As football began to increase in popularity in other parts of the world, it was held as a demonstration sport at the 1900 and 1904 Olympics. At the 1908 London Olympics – four years after FIFA was founded – football became an official competition. Great Britain won the first gold medal.

In 1914, FIFA agreed to recognise the Olympic tournament as an official world football championship. This paved the way for the world's first intercontinental football competition, at the 1920 Olympics, won by Belgium. Uruguay won the next two Olympic tournaments in 1924 and 1928.

Due to the success of the Olympic tournaments, FIFA decided to stage and organise its own world championship. FIFA named Uruguay – the winners of the previous two football world championships – as the host country of the inaugural FIFA World Cup tournament in 1930. Uruguay defeated Argentina in the final to be the first nation to win the World Cup.

Due to the difficulties in travelling before World War 2, only a small number of nations outside of the host continent took part in the first three FIFA World Cups 1930, 1934 and 1938.

Following World War 2, the FIFA World Cup resumed in Brazil in 1950, where Uruguay won it again by defeating the host nation in front of 200,000 people at Rio de Janeiro's Maracana Stadium.

Returning to Europe, the 1954 tournament in Switzerland was the first to feature 16 teams, and with 140 goals scored in 26 games, it holds the record for most average goals per game (5.4).

Brazil commenced a long phase of FIFA World Cup dominance in 1958, easily defeating host nation Sweden in the final. World Cup championship success for Brazil continued in 1962 (held in Chile) and 1970 (Mexico).

Meanwhile the 1966 FIFA World Cup in England witnessed a spectacular success for the host nation, a Geoff Hurst hat-trick helping the English to a 4-2 final win over West Germany at Wembley.

After unsuccessfully attempting to qualify for the 1966 and 1970 finals, Australia qualified for its first FIFA World Cup in 1974. Losses to host nation and eventual 1974 Champions West Germany, and strong neighbours East Germany, were followed by a scoreless draw with Chile, allowing the Aussies to return home with a respectable record.

It was Argentina's turn to celebrate in 1978, as the South Americans hosted and won the FIFA World Cup. The Netherlands were the FIFA World Cup final losers for the second successive tournament.

In 1982 the tournament expanded to 24 teams, with Spain hosting and Italy winning its second FIFA World Cup final. West Germany lost its second FIFA World Cup final in a row in Mexico in 1986, when Diego Maradona inspired Argentina to its second World Cup triumph in eight years. The West Germans gained revenge at Italia '90, with the 1-0 win over Argentina in the final being the last match played by West Germany, as the unified German team competed from 1994.

The first FIFA World Cup played outside of Europe or South America took place in 1994 when the USA hosted. Brazil won the first FIFA World Cup final to go to penalties.

In 1998 the FIFA World Cup finals increased to 32 participants, and it was France who became the first team since Argentina twenty years earlier to take out a FIFA World Cup final for the first time.

It took until 2002 for the FIFA World Cup's two most successful teams to play each other for the first time in a finals match, Brazil defeating Germany 2-0 in the final of the tournament held jointly by Japan and South Korea.

Australia returned to the FIFA World Cup in Germany in 2006, the Socceroos qualifying for the Round of 16 only to be undone at that stage by eventual Champions Italy.

In 2010 the FIFA World Cup went to Africa for the first time, where Australia failed to make the group stage in South Africa after finishing third on goal difference.

A young and relatively inexperienced Socceroos' squad came back from 2014 FIFA World Cup in Brazil with no points but with a passable performance to look back on.

The FIFA World Cup is hosted by the world's largest country Russia in 2018, the 21st edition of the tournament. Qatar will be the host country in 2022.

AUSTRALIAN NATIONAL TEAM HISTORY

The early years – pre-Federation

Australia's first official international matches were played as part of a tour to New Zealand in 1922. While the two losses and a draw in the three-match series against the New Zealand national side did not make for a good start, it was nevertheless a historic phase in Australia's football history.

Australia's first international win came a year later, when New Zealand made a return trip to Australia.

Over the next four decades, Australia's opponents were mostly from the Commonwealth. In addition to many home and away matches against the Kiwis, teams from Canada, India, England and South Africa occasionally toured Down Under, while the Australians ventured abroad to places such as the Dutch East Indies (now Indonesia), Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) and South Africa.

With limited budgets and scant resources for football in Australia at the time, there was little opportunity for professionalism, with virtually all players having to balance their footballing careers with full-time work and family life. And in an era where passenger air travel was in its infancy and transport by sea and railway was the norm, national team tours were very long - sometimes lasting for months.

In those days, a commitment to the Australian national team was a major devotion to the cause. It was an involvement at a completely different level to today, and set a lasting foundation that seems yet to be fully appreciated by the bulk of today's football community.

Highlights of the first 40 years of the Australian national team include huge victories over arch-rivals New Zealand in 1936, a successful tour of southern Africa in 1950, and the 1956 Melbourne Olympic Games - where the Aussies won their opening match against Japan.

The aftermath of the Second World War saw wave after wave of migrants come to Australia with many bringing their passion for football to these shores. Scores of 'ethnic-based' teams made their way onto the scene, together with regular visits from high-profile European sides. The effects of this influx of 'new Australians' is evident in successive generations, with the bulk of Australia's top players in the decade before and after the turn of the 21st century having family roots from the post World War II European migrants.

The late 1950s saw some controversial administrative changes to football in this country, and for a variety of reasons Australia ceased to be officially recognised by FIFA, the game's worldwide governing body, in 1959. As a result, Australia was banned from playing international football. In 1963 the dispute with FIFA was resolved, and Australia became a fully fledged member of the world's governing body – a Federation in its own right.

Post-Federation – and a world title to aim for Australia's first full international matches played after Federation were also its first attempt at qualifying for a FIFA World Cup. Following a number of withdrawals from Asian countries it turned out that Australia, Oceania's only entrant, merely had to play-off against North (DPR) Korea for the right to be at the 1966 FIFA World Cup. An under-prepared Australian side was convincingly beaten by North Korea over the two legs – a North Korean side which went on to reach the quarter finals at England '66.

The qualifying process for the 1970 FIFA World Cup was a truly marathon campaign. Australia finished first in an initial tournament in South Korea (Korea Republic), which was followed by a three match series against Rhodesia, played in the space of six days in 'neutral' Mozambique. Following the eventual victory over the Africans was a home and away final qualification tie against Israel. Inspired by captain Johnny Warren, the end result was the closest of losses over the two legs.

Australia's next World Cup campaign however proved much more successful and after another rigorous first phase of qualifying, the Peter Wilson-led Aussies met South Korea for a place in the 1974 finals. After both the home and away legs ended in draws, a deciding game took place in Hong Kong where Jimmy Mackay's long range strike became part of Australian sporting folklore. Australia won the play-off 1-0, ensuring the country's first participation in a FIFA World Cup finals tournament.

The World Cup was a totally different experience for Australia's part-timers, up against fully professional players from nations where the sport was like a religion.

Coached by Rale Rasic, Australia's first two 1974 World Cup matches were against East Germany (a 2-0 loss) and hosts and eventual winners West Germany (a 3-0 loss).

AUSTRALIAN NATIONAL TEAM HISTORY

Despite the defeats, the Socceroos earned the respect of the football world – East Germany were the only team to defeat Champions West Germany at the cup. Australia gained its first World Cup point with a tight 0-0 draw in its final 1974 match, against Chile.

32 years of FIFA World Cup wilderness

However, after reaching the FIFA World Cup for the first time, qualification proved to be one nightmare after another over the following three decades, with internal challenges affecting preparation, arduous qualifying paths and pure bad luck resulting in failure after failure.

At the national level, Australia went through some unsettled years after the glory of 1974. While the Socceroos (barely) took out the Oceania sub-group of the 1978 FIFA World Cup qualifying phase, fourth place in the subsequent Asian phase – where only first-placed Iran would qualify – made West Germany seem so long ago.

In 1982, a home loss to New Zealand early in the Asia/Oceania group campaign effectively ended Australia's chances. Zone winners New Zealand eventually qualified for their first FIFA World Cup.

The first phase of the attempt to reach the 1986 FIFA World Cup saw Australia take out the Oceania group, which included Israel. It was then a play-off against UEFA Group Seven runners-up Scotland. After the first leg in Glasgow ended 2-0 to the Scots, a fighting and attacking display by the Socceroos in the return fixture somehow ended 0-0. Australia had failed again.

With Frank Arok at the helm, the Australian football team matured throughout the mid to late 1980s, a period which included draws against European powerhouses England and Czechoslovakia, and a stunning 4-1 win over reigning world champions Argentina in 1988. This year also saw the national team qualify for the Olympic Games (the last Olympics with no age restrictions for male football teams) where a 1-0 win over Yugoslavia made the world take notice.

The 1990 FIFA World Cup campaign therefore started with renewed optimism. However it was perhaps an over-confident Australian team which lost the away leg against New Zealand, which ultimately led to second place in the Oceania/Israel group. Group winners Israel progressed to the next stage.

By now a host of Australian players were plying their trade overseas, some rather successfully, and many believed this would eventually take Australian football to another level. The 1994 World Cup campaign saw Australia face two long-distance play-offs to get through, after winning all their Oceania qualifiers. The Socceroos successfully negotiated Canada – albeit only after penalties – which led to a final qualifying confrontation against Argentina. With the comeback of Diego Maradona it seemed the whole world was watching as Australia drew the first (home) leg, but ultimately lost the play-off by one goal, an unlucky own goal in Buenos Aires highlighting the Socceroo curse.

Another clearly dominant performance by Australia in the Oceania stages meant 'only' having to defeat the fourth-placed Asian team to qualify for the 1998 FIFA World Cup. Inspired by a goal from 19 year old Harry Kewell, a Australia drew the first leg against Iran 1-1 away. And at 2-0 up with 20 minutes to go in the second leg, the Socceroos were surely on their way to the World Cup. But then, in what must be the most demoralising 20 minutes in Australian sporting history, Iran showed up the Aussie curse to draw and take out the tie on away goals. Despite not losing a match in the 1998 campaign, Australia missed out yet again.

The Socceroos bounced back with a stellar performance at the 1997 FIFA Confederations Cup, played immediately following the Iran games. With wins over Mexico and Uruguay, Australia reached the final where, following Mark Viduka's early send-off, defeat beckoned against a rampaging Brazilian side.

Australia returned to the Confederations Cup in 2001, defeating reigning world champions France and perennial favourites Brazil on their way to finishing third in the prestigious intercontinental tournament.

These impressive results gave Australia confidence for the final leg of the 2002 FIFA World Cup qualifying campaign. Earlier in the process, the Socceroos had broken the world record for the biggest victory in a World Cup match with a 31-0 win over American Samoa. After then easily accounting for New Zealand, Australia was left with a difficult play-off against Uruguay. The curse of the Socceroos appeared to have lifted with victory in the first (home) leg; but the second leg was a different story, where the Socceroos were eventually overwhelmed by the Uruguayans.

Australia failed to qualify for the 2003 FIFA Confederations Cup, losing to New Zealand in the Oceania Nations Cup final. Combined with financial woes and administrative difficulties faced by the national body, the stark reality of seven consecutive unsuccessful World Cup campaigns and a slowly decaying domestic league, Australian football was in the doldrums.

A new era

Out of the blue, a comprehensive 3-1 away win over 'mother England' in early 2003 marked an on-field turning point for the Australian national team.

Success in the 2004 OFC Oceania Nations Cup ensured qualification for the 2005 FIFA Confederations Cup, a final Oceania FIFA World Cup play-off against the Solomon Islands, and a looming FIFA World Cup qualifying showdown against the fifth-placed South American side.

AUSTRALIAN NATIONAL TEAM HISTORY

After easily accounting for the Solomons in the final Oceania play-off, Australia was confronted by its nemesis from 2001, Uruguay, in its final 2006 FIFA World Cup qualifying play-off match. Under coach Guus Hiddink, a gritty first-leg away performance by the Socceroos ended with just a one-goal margin to the Uruguayans. The final 15 minutes of the Montevideo leg seemed to sway the tie in Australia's favour, with the resolute Australian defence repelling wave after wave of unrelenting Uruguayan attack. At one-nil down after the first leg, Australia's attacking prowess came to the fore in Sydney, although the scoreboard would ultimately record just one goal – a somewhat flukey one by Marco Bresciano – for the Aussies, with no reply eventually sending the tie to penalties. The final hero was Mark Schwarzer, with two telling saves ensuring an unforgettable victory and qualification for Germany 2006. The images of John Aloisi slamming home the final shoot-out goal – and the celebrations – will live in the hearts of Australian football fans for a long time.

Germany 2006

After 95,000 fans packed into the MCG to farewell the Socceroos in a 1-0 win over European Champions Greece, the 2006 FIFA World Cup odyssey began. Australia had formidable group opponents Japan, Brazil and Croatia in the way of a second round berth.

At 1-0 down with just eight minutes to go against Japan in its first 2006 World Cup match, Australia's progress already looked unlikely. But when Tim Cahill drilled in a loose ball to score Australia's first ever World Cup finals goal, followed shortly after by his second, the agony transformed into ecstasy – which turned into complete exhilaration when John Aloisi netted the sealing goal in the dying seconds to make it 3-1.

Brazil proved to be a tough opponent, however the Australians matched it with the pre-tournament favourites and the half-time score of 0-0 was well-deserved after Australia's best half of the tournament. A well-worked Brazil goal just after the break proved to be the key moment of the match, and despite continued pressure from the Australians, a brief loss in concentration by the Socceroo defence in the dying moments allowed the Brazilians to score again.

With Brazil's 2-0 win almost guaranteeing the South Americans' progression, the last group stage match between Australia and Croatia was to decide the remaining Group F top two spot. And it was another pulsating contest with Australia having to come from behind – twice – to tie the match 2-2 and emphatically qualify for the next stage, Craig Moore and Harry Kewell the goalscoring heroes. The result saw World Cup fever sweep through Australia as the pulsating Croatia match showed the drama only provided by the real football.

The emotional roller-coaster ride of Germany 2006 continued as Australia matched it with the Italians right up until just seconds before the end of their Round of 16 match, the match locked at nil-all. However a controversial penalty was then awarded to Italy following Grosso's tumble in the box, resulting in a successful conversion by Totti. The 1-0 loss sent the Australians home in a state of shock.

While the last-gasp contentious penalty seemed to be the cruellest way to end the World Cup dream, the Australian players, coaching staff and fans could depart Germany with their heads held high. After such a long absence, the Australian national side had matched it with the best of the world, in the world's most revered football tournament, and were ultimately knocked-out by the slimmest of margins against the team which would go on to take out the 2006 FIFA World Cup final.

Asia calling

Meanwhile, Australia transferred from the Oceania to the Asian Football Confederation (AFC) in January 2006. The move to Asia was a vital step in the development of the code in Australia at all levels, providing more meaningful qualifying series for each of the national teams, and tougher international club opposition.

The men's senior team's first test in Asia was qualification for the 2007 AFC Asian Cup. Qualifying for the region's premier tournament proved to be a relatively easy affair. However the cup itself was not. Australia only scraped into the quarter-final stage, where Japan knocked the Socceroos out on penalties.

AUSTRALIAN NATIONAL TEAM HISTORY

Australia finished on top in the first-stage qualifying phase for the 2010 World Cup, and ended up comfortably finishing in the top two of its final 2010 qualifying group phase to go directly to South Africa.

After the highs of the 2006 World Cup, and the relative ease of qualification, expectations were high for Australia leading into the 2010 World Cup.

However Australia was thoroughly outclassed in its opening game 4-0 by Germany. And despite finishing the group stage with the same number of points as it did four years earlier, with a draw against Ghana and win over Serbia, Australia failed to progress.

Meanwhile Australia had had a bumpy ride on the way to qualifying for the 2011 AFC Asian Cup. Despite finishing first in its qualifying group, only three points separated the top three teams in the group.

Australia easily made it through the group stage of the 2011 Asian Cup in Qatar. The quarter-final against reigning Asian champions Iraq was only decided with a Harry Kewell goal in the dying minutes of extra time. The Socceroos then turned it on in a 6-0 defeat of Uzbekistan in the semi final, followed by another 120 minute marathon in the final, a 0-1 loss to Japan.

Australia cruised through its first stage of qualifying for the 2014 World Cup, a 1-0 loss away to Oman the only stumbling block along the way. The second stage started however with Australia gaining just two points from its opening three games. Ultimately, and after two gripping 1-1 games against Japan, the Socceroos finished in clear second place ensuring direct qualification to their fourth World Cup finals.

With new coach Ange Postecoglou, and a relatively inexperienced squad, Australia lost each of its three World Cup group matches in Brazil. An inspired fightback against Chile, an undeserved loss to the Dutch, and a back-to-earth defeat to defending champions and number 1 ranked Spain made for an eventful finals tournament for the young Australians, providing plenty of hope for the future.

After slipping to its worst FIFA ranking in over 20 years, hosting the AFC Asian Cup in early 2015 provided the Socceroos the ideal ammunition to redeem some recently-lost pride. Despite a slip-up to South Korea in the group stage, Australia reached, and travelled fairly comfortably through the knock-out phase until an epic decider in Sydney. James Troisi shot high into the net in extra time to secure a 2-1 final win for the Socceroos.

Another eventful World Cup qualifying was to follow. Australia finished clear on top in its first phase of qualifying (ensuring qualification for the 2019 Asian Cup), however the final group stage was to prove the most challenging since joining Asia. Despite just one loss in its six-team group, four draws resulted in a third-placing behind Japan and Saudi Arabia, and a play-off against the third-placed team from the other third round Asian group, Syria. The second leg went to extra time where the Socceroos scraped through 3-2, Tim Cahill the hero of the second home leg. A final home-and-away confrontation against Honduras was much easier than the Syria tie, the 3-1 win on aggregate indicating the relative strength of the Asian zone while also being coach Ange Postecoglou's last matches in charge.

Meanwhile there was a 2018 FIFA World Cup familiarisation session for Australia with a respectable performance at the 2017 Confederations Cup in Russia. In January 2018, expert Dutch coach Bert van Marwijk came on board with a clear objective to guide the Socceroos to a solid World Cup run.
